

Defending Health Against Persecution, Violence, And Armed Conflict

About : The Author : Contact : Terms Of Use

- Home
- Archives
- Topics

About Conflict Health

[\[edit\]](#)

Conflict Health (originally ‘War and Health’) is a blog on the protection of health workers and the health of people from persecution, violence, and armed conflict. It strives to be a comprehensive resource for researchers, policymakers, and practitioners on questions relating to armed conflict, public health, health security, and health diplomacy:

- When do armies, paramilitaries, and insurgents use, exploit, build, and destroy health systems and the health of populations?
- How does air power disrupt health systems?
- When do pandemics threaten international security?
- How do conventional battles affect vaccination programs?
- How do ethnic conflicts shape health systems?

Conflict Health is read by experts, policymakers, journalists, and academics in the international

The Economist, Time, The Guardian, The American Prospect, and other sites.

Your author,
Christopher Albon

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Chris Albon', with a long horizontal flourish extending to the right.

Comments on this entry are closed.

Copyright 2012.

The content available on Conflict Health is solely the opinion of its respective author(s) and does not represent the opinions of their respective employer(s).

Design By DIYThemes

WordPress Admin